LAKEN RILEY ACT IS FIRST IMMIGRATION LAW ENACTED BY NEW ADMINISTRATION

The Laken Riley Act is the first immigration-related law which has been enacted since the inauguration of President Trump on January 20, 2025. The Act is named after Georgia resident Laken Riley who was murdered by an undocumented immigrant previously arrested for another offense but was released pending his court hearing.

Among other things, the law requires the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to detain non-U.S. citizens who are charged with or convicted of theft-related crimes (including burglary, larceny and shoplifting), assaulting a police officer, or a crime that results in death or serious bodily injury (including but not limited to injuries occurring as part of a driving under the influence (DUI) offense). The law does not require a conviction for any of these offenses. The Act would also allow states to sue the DHS for alleged failures in immigration enforcement.

The law also prohibits the U.S. Secretary of State from granting visas to citizens of countries that refuse to accept the return of nationals deported from the United States. Currently, this may include nationals from Russia, India, Nicaragua, Honduras, Brazil, Iran, Iraq, Pakistan, Laos, Cambodia, DRC, Ethiopia, Yemen, Ukraine, and Eritrea. The law also grants standing in federal court to State Attorney Generals to sue the U.S. Department of State (DOS) for a violation of this requirement and to force the DOS to implement the requirement.

EXTENSION OF TEMPORARY PROTECTED STATUS FOR CERTAIN NATIONALITIES

During the last month of President Biden's term of office, one of the actions he took was to extend Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for a number of countries.

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), the Secretary of DHS has the power to designate countries whose nationals become eligible for TPS in the United States. Such designation may be considered due to an armed conflict in the country which would threaten the safety of its nationals; a national or environmental disaster or epidemic in the country and the country has requested the TPS designation for its nationals; or the DHS Secretary determines there are extraordinary and temporary conditions in the country preventing safe return by its nationals.

Current countries designated for TPS include: Afghanistan; Burma (Myanmar); Cameroon; El Salvador; Ethiopia; Haiti; Honduras; Lebanon; Nepal; Nicaragua; Somalia; South Sudan; Sudan; Syria; Ukraine; Venezuela; and Yemen.

Once a country has been designated for this protection, during TPS period its nationals who are present in the United States may not be detained or deported for an immigration violation. Additionally, TPS designees are eligible to apply for employment authorization and permission to return to the United States from international travel, if not having a valid visa, with a valid TPS parole travel document.

TPS itself does not create a pathway to a Green Card or U.S. citizenship. Currently, under USCIS policy, an individual who has been granted permission to return to the United States using a TPS parole travel authorization document will be considered “inspected and admitted” making them eligible to complete the adjustment of status process in the United States if they have a legal basis, such as family or employer sponsorship, to apply for permanent residency.

Although President Biden extended TPS for certain countries, the new Trump administration may attempt to reverse the extensions. The new administration has already indicated that it will not be extending TPS for nationals from Venezuela, even though President Biden already extended their TPS status. If the Trump administration attempts to withdraw already designated countries, nationals of those countries may sue the administration to prevent the withdrawal.

Additional information about changes to the TPS program and the countries designated for TPS will be contained in future Masuda Funai Business Immigration Monthly newsletters when it becomes available.

COVID-19 VACCINATION NO LONGER REQUIRED FOR ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS TO PERMANENT RESIDENCE

On January 22nd, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) announced that it is waiving the requirement that applicants for adjustment of status to permanent residence provide evidence that they have received the vaccine against COVID-19.

As part of the process of applying for permanent residence through adjustment of status, applicants are required to submit a medical exam (Form I-693) completed by a Designated Civil Surgeon of USCIS. The medical exam must indicate whether the applicant has received all the required vaccinations as determined by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS)/Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

Previously, failure to comply with all the required vaccinations, which included the COVID-19 vaccine, would result in the applicant being found inadmissible to the United States and ineligible for an immigrant visa unless the applicant is eligible to apply for a waiver of the requirement. The waiver of the vaccination requirement was generally only available in limited circumstances.

The notice indicates that, as of January 22nd, USCIS will not deny any adjustment of status application based on the applicant's failure to present documentation that he/she received the COVID-19 vaccination.

During February 2025, the following foreign nationals approved in an employment-based immigrant classification become eligible to apply for permanent resident status through adjustment of status (“AOS”).
